

A WALK IN THE WOODS

Hainault Forest, Havering Country Park and Bedfords Park

ANCIENT HORNBEAM POLLARDS, MAJESTIC WELLINGTONIA AVENUES AND HERDS OF RED DEER ARE THE HIDDEN TREASURES TO BE FOUND IN THESE THREE COUNTRY PARKS, ALL WITHIN 15 MILES OF CENTRAL LONDON

The woods in these country parks on the outskirts of London are all former royal hunting grounds providing venison for the king's table. At Bedfords Park this is commemorated with a deer park holding a herd of red deer, managed by the London Borough of Havering, and in all the woods there are fallow and muntjac deer living wild. Havering Park has the second largest plantation of wellingtonia in England: this can be enjoyed along an easy-access trail suitable for buggies and wheelchairs. Similar exotic planting was carried out in Bedfords Park in the 18th and 19th centuries. In autumn Hainault Forest is a great place for a fungal foray – more than 400 species have been found, including several rare examples. Many of these are associated with the ancient hornbeam pollards, a relic of the time when locals had the right to graze their animals and cut wood from the forest. As well as managing this ancient woodland in keeping with its history, the Woodland Trust has purchased an additional 53 hectares (130 acres) of adjacent land and is planting 55,000 native trees with the local community. The visitor centre at Bedfords Park, managed by Essex Wildlife Trust, was built on the site of the 18th-century manor house, and incorporates many sustainable features by reusing parts of the earlier building. A free trail guide describing the waymarked route around the park can be picked up from there and an events programme downloaded from www.essexwt.org.uk
